BRAND BOOK

BRAND STORY

BRAND DNA

When I was eight years old, my family went on vacation to Phuket. We went to a factory that they sold leather jackets and they showed us a runway. I was completely fascinated by one of the jackets. My brother and I bought sketch books from 7-Eleven and started draw clothes, although our enthusiasm faded after a while.

Since watching the documentary series Sweatshop in 2015, I have become deeply engaged in the topic of ethical trade. It was heartbreaking to see how the people who make our clothes are treated — yet I also understand that these jobs are essential for many. My goal is to help create safe, fair, and sustainable workplaces in developing countries.

Vivi has different meanings in various countries, but it symbolizes life, energy, and consciousness.

BRAND VALUE

BRAND DNA

Ethics

Everyone involved in making the garments is treated fairly, with safe and good working conditions.

Craftsmanship and Quality

The pieces are created with care, precision, and respect for traditional craftsmanship.

Sustainability and Natural Materials

A focus on natural textiles and environmentally friendly production methods. Using certified fabrics and deadstock materials.

Timelessness and Creativity

Designs that endure over time, featuring playful and creative details.

UNIQUE SELLING POINT

BRAND DNA

Vivi create timeless, ethically crafted fashion that feels as good as it looks. Using natural materials and respecting the hands that make our clothes, we combine comfort, style, and sustainability — so you can feel confident, inside and out.

TARGET GROUP

BRAND DNA

The target audience is high-income women living in major cities in Europe or the United States. They lead active, balanced lives where health, wellbeing, and personal growth are central. Nutritious food, exercise, yoga, and Pilates are priorities, and they seek to feel strong both physically and mentally. They are conscious consumers who care about what goes into the clothes and products they buy, avoiding hormone-disrupting substances. Quality materials matter, with a clear preference for natural, ethically produced fabrics. They value exclusive pieces, accessories, and styling that express personal identity, while also caring deeply about transparency and ethical trade. Authentic, trustworthy brands attract them most, and although they follow trends, they remain loyal to timeless elegance and lasting quality and refined modern aesthetics globally.

Celine, 29 years

She is an executive with an annual income of approximately 2,500,000 NOK. Her interests include yoga, travel, shopping, socialising, eating well, and feeling good both physically and mentally. She values ethical trade, high-quality garments, and compassion for those who produce clothing. She seeks hormone-friendly textiles and avoids synthetic fibres entirely. She believes in buying fewer pieces and preserving them for as long as possible. Celine treats each garment as special, following trends only when they offer long-term wearability. She prioritises health, choosing clean, organic food and maintaining an active lifestyle. Yoga and Pilates are part of her weekly routine. She rarely goes out partying, preferring dinners, cultural events, and time with friends. Her wardrobe includes Victoria Beckham, Max Mara, Jil Sander, and Totême.

BRAND POSITIONING

The map shows a clear connection between natural textiles and timelessness. VIVI Is positioned in a market where few brands combine timeless and trendy aesthetics with a conscious choice of natural materials. Max Mara and Totême are the closet competitors on the axis, but their expression is more conservative and strict than VIVI, wich more movement, organic shapes and a plyaful design language into the timeless segment. Stella McCartney is more trend driven and uses both synthetic and natural materials. Miu Miu surprises with a high proportion of natural materials, but is trend driven and season dependent. Victoria Beckham and Jil Sander share a timeless aesthetic with slightly different elegance, but sit lower on the material axis. VIVI stands out by using the combination o timeless yet vibrant design and hormonefriendly, natural textiles.

SUSTAINABILITY

Responsible Consumption and Production — UN Sustainable Development Goal No. 12

Ensure sustainable consumption and production patterns

Sustainable consumption and production is about doing more with fewer resources. Today we consume far more than is sustainable for the planet. For example, global food waste is estimated at around 1 billion tonnes annually.

My brand uses natural materials as its main focus on sustainability. Research shows that hormone disrupting textiles can affect fertility over time. It is therefore incredibly important to use hormone friendly textiles, which are often better for sensitive skin and allergy sufferers. Natural materials are biodegradable, unlike synthetic textiles that release microplastics every time they are washed.

With regard to animal welfare, most leather products will be made from deadstock leather or from animals that have lived under organic conditions and been used for meat production, preferably in Scandinavia.

Certifications such as GOTS, OEKO-TEX and B Corp are used.

Garments will be of high quality, durable and easy to repair. I also want to offer repair services so that garments can be used for longer. Unnecessary production is avoided, with a maximum of 2 collections per year to reduce overproduction. The aim is to design timeless clothing that can be worn for many years. Packaging is made from recycled plastic or materials that can be disposed of in food waste.

Ethical production

VIVI is committed to ethical production at every stage of production. The 2016 documentary series Sweatshop, which shed light on clothing production in Bangladesh, made a lasting impression and shaped the foundation of how VIVI approaches manufacturing. Safe and decent workplaces in developing countries matter deeply to us. To ensure ethical production at every stage, VIVI seeks certified suppliers, prioritises transparency throughout the supply chain, and believes in visiting the factories where our garments are made.
